

Meet Development & Communications Director

Jane Frantz

I am pleased to introduce Samaritan's new Development & Communications Director, Jane Frantz. Jane launched her career nearly 30 years ago with United Way of Neenah-Menasha as a campaign associate. Shortly thereafter, she became the communications director when United Way Fox Cities was formed. Her professional journey includes experience in various marketing, communications and development positions for private, non-profit, and public organizations in a wide variety of industries including senior living, education, design and construction, and consumer packaged goods.

Jane graduated from UW Fox Valley and UW Green Bay double majoring in business and communications and double minoring in humanistic studies and philosophy.

She is thrilled to join Samaritan and considers this position an opportunity to blend her faith, talents, personal experience in mental health and professional background to benefit the organization and community. "I love our mission to connect mind and spirit, so individuals thrive. It is easy to forget we are spiritual beings," she said, "and it is important for me that at Samaritan we affirm the sacred dignity of all human beings."

On a personal note, Jane is happy to share that she was born in Milwaukee, the tenth of 11 children, and moved to Appleton on her ninth birthday where she has lived ever since, except for a few years in Phoenix after high school. She and her husband of 30 years, Tom, have four adult children: Emily (37), Alex (27), Ethan (23), and Phoebe (19). In her spare time, she enjoys walking, traveling, biking, writing, singing with her church worship team, and helping people realize their full potential.

Please help me welcome Jane to Samaritan's team!
